president of the United States and the Senate with particular reference to treaties, Prof. Wilson wrote:

"No one would desire to see the president possessed of authority to override the decisions of the Senate, to treat with foreign powers and appoint thousands of public officers, without any other than that shadowy responsibility which he owes to the people that elected him."

"It is even more important to know how the House is being grafted than to know how the plans of the architect were conceived and how his specifications were calculated. It is better to have skillful work—stout walls, reliable arches, unbending rafters, and windows sure to 'expel the winter's flaw'—than a drawing on paper which is the admiration of all the practical artists in the country."

Apparently it is a far, far cry from 1885 when the professor was a humble instructor in a great university to 1910 when the same man is president of the United States and ambitious to be a world leader at the head of his own League of Nations.

However, there is a certain striking similarity between ideas of the professor of 19 and the president of 44. In that same "Congressional Government," appear these words, still bearing upon the relations of the president and Senate in regard to treaties: His (the president's) only power of compelling compliance on the part of the Senate lies in his initiative in negotiation, which affords him a chance to get the country into such scrapes, so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action, that the Senate hesitates to bring about the appearance of dishonor which would follow its refusal to ratify the rash promises or to support the ludicrous threats of the Department of State."

Did President Wilson have in mind the views of Professor Wilson when he initiated the negotiations ending in the Wilson League of Nations, affording him "a chance to get the country into such scrapes" and "so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action" that the Senate would be compelled to accept the Wilson League of Nations or have the appearance of wincing?

Is it necessary to point out that the office buildings are filled with fine sand which cuts into good furniture, destroys floors, fills cracks and crevices and does untold damage?

Do we have to live in a dirty dust laden city until he become so used to it that it takes the comments of strangers within our gates to jolt us into realization that after all Hammond has not progressed far since the pioneer days when the streets were of sand?

Dust in Hammond originates principally on the un-oiled right of way of railroads and on vacant lots such as the Central school house yard. The school house yard has been cleared of the Liberty Hall debris for nearly a year and yet nothing has been done to prevent the great sweeping up of dust that takes place when ever the wind blows.

Let every good citizen start in to eliminate source of dust contamination. Make Hammond a clean place in which to live. Just because we have to put up with dirty drinking water is no reason why we should breathe polluted air.
